I Know Just What You're Saying, a Conversation Conducted Solely through Visual Art

BOSTON, MA, November 25, 2015 - Kingston Gallery is pleased to present an all-members group exhibition, I Know Just What You're Saying. In a visual version of the telephone game, each artist presented a work of their own art to one artist member, and that artist responded in kind to another artist, following the order of a list made by Gallery Director, Shana Dumont Garr. The results of the uni-directional exchange, conducted via email throughout the fall of 2015, will be displayed in the gallery this January. The artwork will be presented in the same order as the “conversations” took place so that viewers may follow the conversation, and decide for themselves if the artists do, indeed, know just what their colleagues are saying.

On View: January 6 - 31, 2016
First Friday Opening Reception: Friday, January 8, 5:00–8:00 pm

Kingston Gallery is an alternative space that is run by a group of Boston-based contemporary artists. The twenty-five members, and their current Emerging Artist, Lavaughan Jenkins, each took part in this visual conversation. While the artists specialize in a wide range of media, including painting, photography, sculpture, and installation, they all embrace the practice of continual experimentation in their work. The camaraderie among the artists is reflected in their support for each other's ideas, artwork, and contributions to the community within and outside of Kingston Gallery.

I Know Just What You're Saying provides an opportunity for artist members to get to know each other, and for visitors to make unexpected connections between a diverse range of artwork.
